Subject: Commodity Position Limits

CFTC Commissioners,

I am not a sophisticated trader who deals in the commodities futures markets. I consider myself to be a well educated "typical" American citizen who has legitimate concerns regarding the fairness of the playing field in financial markets, including the commodity markets. My specific area of concern is the review of hard limits for derivatives trading in commodities of finite supply, specifically the Silver market.

It is my belief that current large positions in the silver market should have zero consideration when establishing fair position limits in silver. Enforcement of the new law is a separate issue, but should not impact the decision process for determination of the fair value for position limits. In essence, my suggestion is summed up in the following: "Do not make an improper long-term decision based on difficult short-term factors".

Silver analyst Ted Butler has openly suggested a 1500 contract limit for silver. He has documented a compelling case as to how this specific number was derived. Regardless of the specific number, I strongly believe the limits in silver should be in line with other commodities, which is not the case today.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
